introductory remarks, in the absence of the president of the society, Henry Gannett, who had been kept from the banquet by illness. Addresses were made by the German ambassador. Count von Bernstorff; the French ambassador, J. J.
Jusserand, and Representative Mann of Jusserand. and Representative Mann of Illinois. The latter aroused the enthu-stasm of those present when he said he hoped that the public would soon be speaking of Col. Goethals as "Maj. Gen-Goethals."

Hold Informal Reception.

At the conclusion of the speechmaking Col. and Mrs. Goethals, at the suggestion of Secretary Bryan, held an informal re ception, President Wilson and his party aving found it necessary to retire from the banquet room upon the conclusion of the presentation and acceptance speeches.

The principal decoration was the legend "Atlantic-Goethals-Pacific in enormous electric lights above the speakers' table, and during the dinner a miniature dredge and a miniature battleship were carried through the room by waiters. Cakes were served from miniature sand and earth dump carts.

Sees No Selfishness.

"There is nothing selfish in the emi ence of Col. Goethals. It is representative of a great profession; it is reprerepresentative of a great spirit.

"I am glad that this thing was not done by private enterprise and that there is no thought of private profit anywhere in it, but that a government put itself at the service of the world and used a great man to do a great thing. That is the ideal of the modern world, that the services to mankind shall be commonly shared.

"So I esteem it a real privilege, acting on behalf of this society, to present to you, Col. Goethals, this very beautiful inedal. It is made of mere gold and gold is of no consequence in this connection, but it speaks in the most precidus metal we know the gratitude and the admiration of the world."
